As climate policies evolve around the globe, attention is shifting from their conceptual design to the challenges of implementation. Where theoretical concerns once dominated, legal professionals are now called upon to ensure smooth operation of the regulatory framework. No area reflects this better than the carbon market, where each transaction is subject to sophisticated contractual arrangements, liability rules, accounting practices, and other mandatory constraints.

Responding to the growing demand for a discussion forum on these issues, the Carbon & Climate Law Review strikes a balance between the interests of practitioners, notably those engaged in the rapidly evolving carbon market, and a more doctrinal focus, alternating legal policy recommendations with timely articles on legal aspects of carbon trading and other dimensions of greenhouse gas regulation.

A section on current developments updates readers on the most recent events, trends, and political decisions. Most importantly, however, the Carbon & Climate Law Review brings together representatives from the legal discipline for the first time in one specialised journal, allowing them to engage in a dynamic debate on the law of climate change.

EUROPEAN PUBLIC PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP LAW REVIEW

Over the years public-private partnerships have been developing in several Member States. They can be an important tool for improving the quality of public services and supporting growth in Europe. The new journal EPPPL aims to cover the whole complex of legal and financial arrangements related to these important forms of cooperation between public authorities and private operators. As an English language publication it attracts articles from leading international experts who report on key legislative developments and analyse recent judgments by the European and international courts. The journal emphasises on decision-makers' views at a national and international level. As such, it serves businesses, legal practitioners, government officials and academics in the EU and beyond.
